EX-VOLUNTEERS

IN HARD LUCK.

When the president made his two calls on the country last year for vol-unteers to fight Spain, 200,000 men left their homes and employment to enlist. Since the war has ended about 100,000 of these have been honorably discharged. Many of them went back to their old employment and are engaged once old employment and are engaged once more in the peaceful arts. A great number, however, have failed to get work from one cause and another. In a great many cases these ex-soldiers gave up good positions when the couv-try needed their services with the untry needed their services with the understanding that when they were neustered out they could go back to the work they left when the war began.

In many instances the former soldiers now know that the specious promises of getting back their jobs were not made in good faith, and they are now reduced to very straightened circumstances. In many cases men who lately were the uniform of Uncle Sam's volunteer army are obliged to exactically unteer army are obliged to exactically unteer army are obliged to practically unteer army are obliged to ractically live on charity.

The same state of affairs was witnessed at the close of the civil war and has been the case after every war in the world's history when large numbers of men were suddenly thrown out of a means of livelihood by being discharged from service after peace was declared. In olden times these large bodies of ex-soldiers have often been the cause of much trouble to their country and have in some instances fomented riots and other expressions of discontent.

The Grand Army of the Republic was first started to help the men who were first started to help the men who were then discharged, and much good was done in the way of aiding the ex-fight-ers and their families.

The men who composed the volunteer

The men who composed the volunteer army of the United States are very different from the class who created trouble after many European wars. Those men were mere fighters and knew no other trade, while in the present instance the ex-soldiers, in a great majority of cases, were holding good positions before the war. Among them are ministers, doctors, lawyers, electricians, bridge builders, iron workers, mechanics, nurses and men in other walks of life, and they are, besides, from very life, and they are, besides, from every state of the Union. In New York city, however, the dis-tress is seen more prominently perhaps than in any other place because more of them have been attracted to that city by the hope of work. They supposed that it would be easy to find employment in such a big place.

The Red Cross Relief association is doing what it can for these men. The association has the names of between 700 and 1,000 men for whom it is en-deavoring to obtain employment and can supply to employers workers ex-perlenced in almost any profession, business or trade. They do not ask for high wages, but wish only to earn a living.

During the few heavy snowfalls that New York has had this winter some of the ex-soldiers obtained work in the street cleaning department, and citizens have several times stopped to watch men dressed in the army uniform shoveling snow from the curb.

Among the men who have applied to the Red Cross for work is a preacher from Texas who gave up his charge and enlisted as a private. He thought that he could get mission work to do in New York after he was discharged. He could get nothing, however, until the first fall of snow, when the parson went to work in a light summer suit. When asked why he gave up preaching the asked why he gave up preaching the gospel to shoulder a musket, the Texan said frankly:
"I believe in teaching and preaching the gospel of peace until an enemy at-tacks my country. Then the gospel of peace becomes ineffective. Nothing but solid lead, and plenty of it, is any sort of use. I thought I could better serve the Master by shooting Spaniards than by talking religion, and so I just en-

Abbas II seems bent upon making himself impossible, and in the event of his deposition becoming necessary the readiest substitute would appear to be younger brother, who from childhood upward was always the brighter there is an alternative worth consideration and that is the restoration of the old Mussulman succession vested in the elder branch of the family. This was set aside in 1866 by Sultan Abdul Aziz, who was bribed by the Viceroy Ismail to alter the succession to his di-

It was then that he received from his suzerain the high sounding Persian title of khedive. By this arbitrary act Prince Halim, the only surviving son of Mehemet Ali, was excluded from the succession in favor of Ismail's son Tewfik. Halim, the most liberal and enlightened member of the family, is now dead, but his children remain. The eldest son, Prince Sald, who has received a careful European education, would be persona grata to the Egyptian people, both as the grandson of Mehemet Ali and as representing a return to the Koranic law of succession.

The present khedive is the seventh ruler of Egypt in the line of Mehemet Ali, and the second Abbas. The name is a sinister one in the Egyptian dynasty. The first Abbas, who succeeded Ibrahim in 1849, had a brief reign, but long enough to make his memory execuated. Cowardly and cruel, addicted to the most resugnant form of vice, he was enough to make his memory execrated. Cowardly and cruel, addicted to the most repugnant form of vice, he was assassinated by his own creatures in 1854 at Abbasiyeh, in the palace whose gaunt remains still line the road.

His name became a byword in Egypt, and the members of the vice regal family have always discreetly consigned him to oblivious as much as possible. He him to oblivion as much as possible did not reside at the Cairo citadel, like his predecessors, Mehemet All and Ibra-him, but built himself a rambling pal-ace in the heart of the town, a conspic-uous feature of which is a lofty tower, which he used for his hobby of pigeon flying. Latterly he hid himself in Ab-basiyeh.

Senator Allen's Stogles.

Senator Allen of Nebraska is an in-veterate smoker of stogies. He never lights a cigar, but always has a waist-coat pocket full of long, slender sto-gies and dispenses them to his smoking clientele. The senator is very gener-ous with his tobacco. Senator Mason facetiously calls it prodigal generosity without extravagance.

An Experience that Came Very Near Verging on the Embarrassing. (Indianapolis Sentinel.)

Two Indianapolis ladies had an exciting experience last Fall, and one which has taught them to look before they leap. They were in New York on a shopping expedition, having several hours to wait be-tween trains, and they had gone about until they each had a large stock of bundles. Both were hungry, and decided it was time to find a good cafe and eat. Now, neither of these women was at all brilliant. They were simply good, honest little women who read the woman's department and the recipes in the paper, and who skip all the editorials and other excling things.

"I have heard my husband speak of a place here called Delmonico's," said one.
I believe that must be a good restaurant, for I frequently read about soups and things prepared by Delmonico's and things prepared by Delmonico's cooks."

Her friend had heard of it, too, and so they hunted up that famous cafe. They entered unsuspectingly, and the head waiter showed them to a table, while another waiter took their bundles. They were so hungry that they smiled with delight over the good things on the card and never thought of looking at the prices. They ordered a good dinner lavishly. It included soup, fish, a roast, a salad and several entrees, to say nothing of dessert. The waiter bowed to the ground and disappeared. Then one of them took the card in her hand once more.

'What's this?" she said. "Here are the

"What's this?" she said. "Here are the prices."

They began to add up what they had ordered. It was $2" worth. They gasped and took out their purses. They had hardly 27 cents between them.

"What are you going to do?" asked one. The other looked at her bundles.

"I am going to cut and run, as the boys say." she said. "We can never pay for it and they may arrest us."

With that she got up, sneaked her bundles out of the rack and went swiftly and silently past the head waiter, who, fortunately, did not notice her. The other woman turned all colors. What should she do? No one was looking. The awful head waiter had his back turned. She reached for her bundles and sneaked out also. Outside she was so afraid they would come after her and call her back that she actually ran as fast as she dared up Fifth avenue. Ahead of her she saw a second woman also on a run. It was her friend, and they never stopped until they were safe from that awful place.

La Grippe is again epidemic. Every precaution should be taken to avoid it. Its specific cure is One Minute Cough Cure. A. J. Sheperd, Publisher Agricultural Journal and Advertiser, Elden, Me., says: "No one will be disappointed in using One Minute Cough Cure for La Grippe." Pleasant to take, quick to act.—Burrow, Martin & Co.

BETRAYED.

A clergyman one day, visiting an old parishioner, inquired of her if she regularly read her Bible, to which the old lady replied in the affirmative.

Soon after, as the minister was about to depart, he suggested reading the evening chapter, to which he would add his blessing. After a little delay, the Bible was presented to the minister, who looked at its dusty covers with astonishment, but the old lady, murmuring something about "dusty morning." wiped the book with the end of her apron.

The minister, taking the book up, it fell open where a pair of spectacles had been left in it. The old hady, suddenly perceiving the specs, started and cried: cried:

Mr. S. A. Fackler, Editor of the Micanopy (Fla.) Hustler, with his wife and children, suffered terribly from La Grippe, One Minute Cough Cure was the only remedy that helped them. It acted quickly. That Are Now Being Recklessly Pursued by the Girls.

A clever writer in one of the magazines remarked the other day that women no longer have to bother their pretty heads to think up new ideas in neckwear and other articles of that sort, because they leave such entirely to the sterner sex, and when a stunning new fashion is brought out for men, simply adopt it, showing a large measure of sense on their part, and a due regard for the economy of gray matter.

The latest fad is not a fashion in dress, but is none the less appropriated from the lords of creation. It is that of carrying one's money loose in one's pocket. The pocketbook is no longer considered de riguer. The tailor Jacket of the up-to-date-period girl is made with two or more pockets. Into these she slips her sliver money, 50-cent pleces in one, quarters in another, dimes and nickles in, another. This change she fishes out with forefinger and thumb, much as her brother does, when the conductor comes around, or there is other demand upon her pecuniary sources. Where she carries her paper money doth not appear. Perhaps she hasn't any; perhaps she places*it in a wallet, and that in an inside pocket. Who can tell to what length these merry maidens will go?

Another fad, and this has nothing to do with Madame ia Mede's domain, either, consists in the use of hammocks instead of beds by young women. This unique idea was probably instituted by some bachelor girl, whose den was too crowded with a bedstead in it, and who, therefore, adopted the regular soldler's hammock, which can be unslung in the morning and stowed away, leaving her room a sitting-room with no trace of the bed chamber about it. Folding beds are not considered good form, so the hammock may be said to fill a long-felt want where space is at a premium. The bachelor man in some instances is adopting this innovation, which is entirely comprehensible if he figured in our last war, and so became used to the vagaries of the net.

All the hammocks with which the writer has ever been personally acquainted had a most reprehensible habit of folding up at inopportune moments and dumping their occupants upon the ground; it is to be hoped that those used by the bachelor girls are steady affairs with no tricks about them, for to be wakened from delightful dreams by sudden contact with a hard floor would be, to put it mildly, an umpleasant experience.—Baltimore News.

A NOVEL CASE.

(Greensboro, N. C., Record.)

(Greensboro, N. C., Record.)

Not long ago a man at Reidsville was standing on the platform as the vestibule passed, running, it is claimed, at about 40 miles an hour, when a postal clerk threw off a mail sack.

This particular sack was filled with books, presumably bound volumes of the Congressional Record.

The whirl of the train whirled the sack against the man's knees, sending him sprawling. He got up, however, and at first did not seem to be much injured. But soon he found his knees were damaged in some way and since then he is a queer shape. He may be standing up and talking when all at once his knees will give way, causing his legs to wobble about like a pair of winding blades. The knees are as apt to throw him forward as backward or sideways. It is claimed that a vital injury has been inflicted to the cap or caps of the knees, both being affected.

The party has consulted D. Schenck, Jr., about bringing suit, but so far Mr. Schenck has not satisfied himself about who he will sue. The Southern ran the train, but one of Uncle Sam's men
